THE GAZETTE.

FRIDAY EVENING, JULY 11.

SOUTHERN WOMEN OF YORE. -The one person on a southern plantation whose life was no sinecure was the genial, stately, and simple-hearted mistress. Hard-working New England housewives and energetic Middle State women used to fancy their southern sisters languid, elegant, and inefficient. "Lying off in a rocking chair with a servant to fan her," came about as near the usual description of a southern lady as anything that occurs to me. No mistake could be greater. With a numerous household to supervise and control, it was necessary that the mistress should possess some executive ability to keep everything going smoothly. There was the storeroom and the "giving out" of provisions. Living on plantations remote from towns, as many did, and purchasing supplies in large quantities, the key-basket was a necessity. Whoever saw a southern housekeeper without that badge of authority? It stood by her at the breakfast table, or was at hand on the sideboard. It went with her on her daily rounds, and its bunch of keys locked up many a thing besides food. That had to be apportioned to the mouths that were to eat it-so much meal and bacon weekly to the people who lived in the quarters and worked in the field, so much to house servants, and so much daily measuring for the table of the family. The hot bread which smokes on the southern breakfast board was measured into the cook's kneading bowl the night before. The coffee was given out, not the uncertain variety. half chicory, or two-thirds rye and molasses, which we drink who buy it ground, but the best Java, bought green, browned over the fire in a spider, and ground as it was wanted. The eggs were counted for the batter cakes or the pone, and to the least minutize of salt and spice, every condiment was distributed under the mistress' eye. This was the only way under that system of affairs, for with the easy going shiftlessness of Chloe and Dinah, had they been as honest as a pane of glass, things would have melted away like snow in a March sun. All the clothing, for winter and summer, for men, women, and children, had to be cut out and made under the direction of the ladies of the family. And at any hour of day or night, if anybody was sick, the mistress was the person to be called upon. The medicine chest was always well supplied with potent remedies, especially with the calomel and quinine which frighten northerners, but which seem to have a blessed affinity for those who live south of Mason and Dixon's line. -Hearth and Home.

McCLURE'S SELF-ADJUSTING, ANTI-FRICTION BACK-CHAIN AND TRAVELLER.

Read the tollowing testimonials to its merits:

New York, April 11, 1873. I have seen, and do most unqualifiedly approve of Mr. W. B. This invention should be speedily in general use.
